3. Inactive and honorary reserve, not eligible for mobilization assignments to any unit.

CIA is currently authorized in excess of active military personnel and anticipates future increases in this authorization.

This Agency is charged with a vital defense mission under and by the NSC. It conducts extensive activities in direct support of Department of Defense needs and a considerable program which is specifically prescribed by the Departments of Defense and State. A great majority of CIA personnel holding military status are essential to the success of these programs and the continued ability of CIA to accomplish its mission, because all Services, we have been able, generally, to retain this personnel and have some assurance that such arrangements will continue to hold good. We do not, however, have the complete assurance of formal agreements.

It is not considered either desirable or necessary that employment by or detail to this Agency should constitute automatic and complete exemption from extended active duty status with the Armed Services. It is, however, considered essential that no individual holding military reserve status and employed by CIA should be called to active duty with the Armed Services, or active military personnel detailed to CIA be relieved from such assignment, without the prior concurrence of the Director of Central Intelligence, regardless of mobilization assignment status. In this manner, the ability of CIA to perform its mission will not be jeopardized, and determination can be made on an individual basis as to whether:

1. The individual concerned can be released for active duty with the Armed Services, and when.
2. The individual concerned cannot be released by CIA.
3. If not released, whether the individual concerned, if not already on active duty, should remain in civilian status or be placed on active military status and detailed to CIA.

It is requested that the Secretary of Defense establish a policy as indicated immediately above to apply during both peace and war, and inform each of the Armed Services accordingly. Upon approval of the recommended policy, it will be necessary for this Agency to make special arrangements on a highly sensitive and restricted basis for the handling of the cases of individuals in covert assignments and other related matters.
